Broadcasting's
decision to force
their stations to air an anti-Kerry
documentary days
before the election
can hardly be considered anything
but a blatant
political move and a big corporation's
attempt to influence a national election.
Such a move is hardly in the public good.

As TV and radio stations become bigger conglomerates
owned by powerful corporations, the bottom line seems to outweigh public interest. It is frightening to me
when such powerful corporations can influence or control
what the public sees
and hears.

We, the citizens,
depend on the FCC to use its power to see that the public
airwaves serve our communities and not
powerful interest groups. Please
exercise this power
to stop Big Media
from controlling journalism and
stifling democracy.
